There is no language in the world that the entire world can read, write, and speak, but masterpieces from around the world can reach every corner of the globe only through translation. These views were expressed by eminent translator and writer Jang Bahadur Goyal as the keynote speaker during a seminar on the topic 'Relevance of World Literature' organized by Sahitya Akademi Delhi in collaboration with the Department of Languages. The seminar, organized under the leadership of eminent novelist and ghazalgo Buta Singh Chauhan, was presided over by Director of the Language Department, Jaswant Singh Zafar and eminent critic Dr Labh Singh Khiva was present as the special guest.

Jang Bahadur Goyal said in his address that world literature makes the reader a global citizen because this literature makes the reader aware of the culture, civilization and environment of every corner of the world.
